

Dead ends, Living Documents

20 pages!? Due next Tuesday!?

You might need to skip breakdancing class.

Staring down a deadline seems daunting whether self-imposed or not. You are expected to perform at your best under pressure: that means original, creative reasoning, with substantial support for your position, year in, year out, for the duration of your academic career. And those periods better be in the right place or there will be consequences!

From essays to research, Papermache captures written words in their final, submitted form, as their author's own intellectual property. From proven, stable, and familiar social media playbook practices, to textbook guardrails like the existing academic editing process and plagiarism detection, we provide a set of tools to help undergraduates through professors grow academically, socially, and professionally. This adds continuity to a classic academic process that until now, reaches a dead end.

From hard to soft sciences, arts and the humanities, at all stages of higher education, interdisciplinary work and their authors convene in one place to connect, interact, and write better papers faster, together.

Your Intellectual Equity, Protected

Down even to our design language, Papermache puts the pursuit of knowledge from information at the forefront of our purpose. For the first time on a platform of its kind, the Creative Commons License protects authors by respecting the infrastructure on which their work is published. By automating the toil associated with source citation, peers are left with freedom to engage in and adaptively reuse quality content from other authors.

This may be a classmate, a peer on another campus, or even your own previous work. We all know the rules: produce original content, powered by profound thoughts and network, with reputation at stake for anything but. Nobody hides on Papermache, so show your peers at other campuses, show your parents back home, show your employers in your dream city.